The Star of "The Prince Chap."

In the theatrical profession, contrary to common view, pleasure is felt in the success of a worthy member, there is satisfaction in the stellar step of Cyril Scott who began starring last season in "The Prince Chap."

A critic who takes himself and every one else gravely places Nat Goodwin and Fritz Williams first in light comedy in this country and says that Cyril Scott follows them, a close second. "At all events," he asserts wisely, "he stands as the representative light comedian of America."

Mr. Scott is neither American, as many think, nor English, as more believe. He was born in that home of spontaneous wit, Ireland. The records read that the event took place at Bainsbridge, County Down, February 9, 1866. It is related of him that he made his debut in a negro role at three dollars a week and board, and after each performance the manager came around, looked him over and said, "Scott you are the worst nigger I ever saw;" and that Scott shook the manager's hand warmly and said, "Thank you, sir, I think so too."

The company in which he made this brilliant beginning stranded in Chicago, and as young Scott hadn't saved much out of his three a week and board, parental assistance was necessary to ship him back to New York. He then joined Miss Minnie Madern, appearing with her in "Caprice" and "In Spite of All" for three seasons. He has supported Richard Mansfield, Letta, E. H. Sothern, De Wolf Hopper, Mrs. Leslie Carter and Anna Held, was with Augustin Daly's company in "The Circus Girl" and "The Runaway Girl," and the pleasantest memory that survives of the brief life "The Money Makers" is of Cyril Scott's work in it as leading man.
